Eng 256F Nineteenth-Century American Literature provides an introduction to the American literary tradition before 1900, addressing in particular the way that the period's prose, narrative fiction, and poetry engages with issues of American expansion, nationalism and national identity, gender and sexuality, race, spirituality, science and technology, and the Civil War and its aftermath. You will be responsible for regular short writing assignments and a group research project in addition to formal essays and exams.