This course examines aspects of the changing face of China. By studying selected literature works and essays from newspapers and magazines, students will further develop their advanced Chinese language skills and gain a broad understanding of a range of issues in a rapidly changing China, including politics, economy, education, media, environment, gender and family. Taught in Chinese. Requirements include presentations, class discussions, reports and exams. Prerequisite: any third year level course in Chinese or consent of instructor.